In addition, Preservation and enhancement of the unprocessed sound of an early 19th-century parish church by digital signal processing: some observations. A study was undertaken to assess the effectiveness of a technique of digital preservation and enhancement (DPE) that may be of use to the fragile acoustic legacy of the 19th-century parish church of St. Mary the Virgin, Stoke-on-Trent (England). It is hoped that this simple but effective method will encourage other churches to investigate DPE techniques. The DPE technique of low-pass filtering with "prewheels" (staggered filtering) was used to remove the radio frequency interference (RFI) inherent in the existing sound media as well as to extend the length of aural recording. The recordings were then subjected to a DPE technique that involved only postprocessing enhancement. This technique also included the following: subjecting the digital audio files to an equalization treatment to enhance the quality of the recorded sound; modifying the volume settings of the digital audio data files; improving the size and clarity of the microphone recordings; and using an audio restoration plug-in so as to improve the clarity of the recorded notes and chords. Audio analysis was performed to determine the success of the DPE technique in removing RFI and in enhancing the clarity of the sound
