A: I do not know your exact language, so this might not be the exact solution to your problem, but you can try as follows. You will need to split your text into sentences. If you look closely at this list of the most common words you will see that these words have some main common characteristics (they are nouns, so one characteristic is that they denote items):
submitTitle(thingId) { return thingId + ',content' === "a" ? submitTitle(thingId) : submitTitle(thingId + ',content') }
If your list of terms has an average of a certain word between 2 and 3 times, then you could say that the probability of it being a noun is 33.3%. After you have identified all of the nouns you can then apply the same technique to all of the verbs etc. If that doesn't work, you will need to get someone who is familiar with your language. Ok, so the whole saga was very interesting, so I am glad to have it shared here. So here it is! A look inside my Facebook gallery and a couple of pictures showing how it all went down. Thanks for having me! I am now officially on a site of heroes. For those who didn't follow the whole thing here's the short version. This is my first tattoo and I contacted Dynamic and got myself done. This is the back of my leg. Not all that happy with the placement, but I do like it. It took one hour and twelve minutes to do, here is the finished piece And here is the front of my leg. I don't really think there's anything to say about this one, though it looks ok. Took about two hours to do, here's the finished piece Here is the before. I used a fairly new technique that involved black permanent marker (this is the white ink visible in the background on the blanket), it seemed to work well. Here's a closeup of the tattoo and how it's done. Yes I had to get this taken of me in our dentist office, it was the only place where I could get some good photos. So, what do you think? I have been getting a lot of questions about this. Will I need to get

Taking It Easy with a Soft Faux-Suede Bedspread Easy as it is to look through a room full of color-filled prints and furniture, the soft color palette and sedate prints of Today's Homeowner will be a refreshing change. [Courtesy of Pottery Barn] Tools Share! By Ashley Cappe Running a business is not always easy. After all, the show is over, the paint is dry, and the furniture is back on the shelf. Running a home is a little different, but it doesn't have to be stressful. If you've ever worked with home decor, you know that color is one of the most powerful ways to change the mood in a room. The key is finding the right colors to make your home the warm, welcoming, modern retreat you've been dreaming of. Simple, gentle colors can unify a room. In today's home, the earthy palette of natural stone and weathered wood is combined with pastel colors such as pale greens and a fresh palette of blue and yellow.
