BLINK is an interactive horror story based on psychological themes. During a regular night of babysitting, the youngest daughter of a local psychiatrist goes missing. A mystery begins when the player joins as a newly employed nanny. The first person action-adventure game begins with the player waking up in a strange bedroom. After a journey through the home and a meeting with the family's nanny, it begins to get dark. Time to go babysitting... How to Play BLINK: Play the game as a first-person view, action-adventure horror story, exploring an abandoned home that haunts a troubled family. Your main focus is helping the Vida family uncover clues that could help find their little girl. The girl is the only link that unites the family. You use an Inventory System. Complete tasks such as surveillance, exploration, puzzles and clues to find out the truth about the girl's disappearance. Use the Inventory System to find key items and objects as you go through the house. They can help you with puzzles, clues, and solve events. You also use Health to keep yourself alive. Babysitting has never been this scary... Collectibles: Find nearly 100 collectibles to discover secrets about the characters and their circumstances. Digital Soundtrack: 10 various music tracks from the game. Each with their own story to tell. "A combination of psychological horror and puzzle game, BLINK is a short game that's impossible to forget." - Mobile Gamer

The Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday blocked the sale of an anti-anxiety drug that is being used to help keep elephants calm during tourist and research encounters. The company L-Orinoc.ai first introduced the drug, called Revalorix, three years ago at major scientific and medical conventions, but did not submit it for FDA approval. In recent years, the agency has issued warnings that the drug can lead to seizures and psychiatric problems. The company makes the drug as a tablet. Its website promises that it is safe for humans to use and is approved by the U.S. Army and Royal Marines. Its trade name is "predictive conditioning medic" and it is marketed for treatment of "stress-related or anxiety-related disorders." The FDA warned that the drug "may cause psychological effects." When L-Orinoc.ai sought a new application for the drug, it applied for orphan drugs status

The game is inspired by Realm Grinder and Swarm Simulators. In Realm Grinder, you can manipulate a virtual world and people have some preferences for their lifestyle, how much time they can spend on working, where to live etc. In Swarm Simulator, people are idealized mechanical creatures, which can build chains and can arrange their behaviour with routing algorithms and limited energy. They can move in their roads with the help of the electricity. Swarm Simulator is a realtime simulation. If you think about the real world, it is impossible to have such a huge number of robots and we also don't have any "robots" people, who build robots. The citizens can manipulate with their resources only, they can build houses, they can send diplomats to other realms and so on. During a game, the system is aware about the actions of each citizen, the actions of creatures and so on. The citizens fall into many types of the discrete classes: peasants, craftsmen, knights, nobles, priests etc. The citizens are idealized people, who are mostly like real people. They have preferences, their minds are not as special as in the Realm Grinder or Swarm Simulator, they have a life expectancy, they can raise their children and if they are tired or if a crime happens they can end their life peacefully. The citizens are different from each other. They have preferences of the lifestyle, the desire to live and to do, as they want and the laws are active for them. Even if there are only 80 citizens in the world, they may behave in hundreds of different ways. The citizens know the laws, but do not know the history of the world or the history of the realm. In the game there are two realms, which are more or less equal, but only few citizens live at the first realm and the other inhabitants of it have another problem: diseases. In Realm Grinder, diseases are an important part of the game, but in Swarm Simulator, diseases affect only a small part of the population. The realms have different abilities of the architecture and resources. In Realm Grinder, you can discover three types of buildings: the construction site, the military and the office. The construction site is a construction point, where you can build other buildings or dig a new road to other construction point. Buildings The construction site has several buildings, which can be called and built. The construction will start immediately. The construction can be a stone c9d1549cdd
