[Extra quality] Crack.Astro-Vision.LifeSign.Mini.1.0.5.0 hit Drew Angerer / Getty Images Pennsylvania's GOP gubernatorial candidate Scott Wagner is looking to "kill" Philadelphia. Wagner is in a tight race against Democrat Tom Wolf, a term-limited former governor who has been endorsed by Democratic mayors across the state. And a recently released ad lambasting Wolf's position on Philadelphia policy — including praise for the city's tax-increase referendum and support for the struggling Ben Franklin Technology Center — has left the Wolf campaign fuming. Republican "killing" is a popular media trope, but it's more useful as a shorthand for denouncing terrible policy or ills that politicians have allegedly created, a dubious creative license that few policy makers likely get nearly as wrong as many in the media do. The truth is usually somewhere in the middle. And all too often that middle ground is a little to the left of the political center. Wagner, however, has become the symbol of just how bad the disconnect can be. And in the race for governor — the only office for which Pennsylvania voters have a choice — he's not the only candidate doubling down on an anti-regulatory, "anti-taxpayer" message that's been getting a lot of attention over the last six years. At a recent debate, he called for the abolition of Philadelphia's
