Kicking and Stamina use based on player performance
This is an important year for FIFA, as the franchise once again returns to its roots with a brand new game. “HyperMotion Technology” has been developed with a focus on FIFA’s most-requested features, which are detailed in the document below. Empowering the Player: The core of FIFA is the game itself. It is the first football game in the series to be powered by physical models. “HyperMotion Technology” was built to replace the game’s rigid controls with fluid gameplay. This provides the player with better on-ball awareness and enables a more authentic experience when playing FIFA. Retailer-
Want to know more? Discuss it on our forums Since there are now 14 active buttons and controls, the number of game-related actions has doubled. “HyperMotion Technology” increases the control-to-action ratio, allowing the player to control the ball with more natural touch. This allows them to choose where to pass, shoot, dribble and tackle. Hovering the ball is now less precise, and players are now able to see each of the dribble controls as they touch the ball. This allows them to make a more informed decision when passing, shooting and dribbling. They can see the result of their actions in real-time without delay, and can make even more informed decisions. This also improves the game's stamina system. The more actions taken during a match, the slower the player's movement becomes. Stamina is now dependent on the number of gameplay actions, not solely on the number of game minutes played. If the player is in a good, high-intensity match, then their stamina will also be higher. In this way, stamina is dependent on the game and the player's effort. This puts a greater emphasis on the player's performance in the game, helping them to make better decisions. These decisions impact the whole team, as they attempt to maximize the amount of game time played. The ball control logic is now more intelligent. On the pitch, the game does not pick one set of rules and apply them to all players. The rule set is now dynamic, meaning the game responds to the situation on the pitch. Players can play with less obvious ball control methods, because the game will respond more intelligently to their actions and in-game behaviour

Features Key:

- EA SPORTS FIFA 22 delivers everything you know and love about the game and its rich legacy and features more than a dozen innovations and improvements that will make you feel the difference right away. FIFA 22 introduces the brand-new engine that revolutionises football for the very first time.
