Q: Passing between structs in C# I have a struct with two variables of type Double: struct Coord { public double x, y; ... } I have a class Coordinate with the overload like: public static Coordinate Coordinate(Coord lhs, Coord rhs); and I want to implement it like so: public static Coord Coordinate(Coord lhs) { double x = lhs.x, y = lhs.y; return new Coord(x, y); } But it doesn't compile. It says that Coordinate is a struct and I can't create Coordinate from another. How do I implement this overload to do what I need?

nFAD is a game where you have to fight against those invisible enemies with your own weapons in your body! It's a game inspired by the real world where you have to attack invisible pathogens in your body, and the game is a simulation of the chemical changes that occur when you defend or attack the pathogens in your body! The player can see and control the nano fighter, and the in-game environment is a living simulator. It's a very suitable game for those who like a quick start and experience the simulation of the game, with a variety of interior environments in your body. How to Play: When a foreign invader such as virus or bacteria enters your body, and it causes damage to cells, the immune system will begin to attack, and will fight with it and eliminate it. In this game, the nano fighter is used to deliver these drugs to the bacteria and viruses that are inside you, and provides a complete rehabilitation, that will improve your immune system. There will be a variety of challenges in this game to help you improve your fighting skills. Your first duty is to deploy the first wave of the drugs, and gain at least some control of the battle of your body, so that you will have a better opportunity for the following drug release. Biological weapon weapons Attack mode When you launch a biological weapon, it will be made into a battlefield for up to 5 seconds, and the amount of incoming damage will be calculated. When activated, you will be able to equip weapons to the nano fighter, and be able to shoot it. Fly mode When flying is activated, it allows you to control the nano fighter by pressing the left and right arrow keys, and the space bar. Flight range When you move outside of the ground area, the nano fighter will automatically move away. Start flying Fly mode is automatically activated when you are in the ground area, and the amount of flight ranges depends on the stage that is in use. After the battle is finished, you can press f12 to return to the home menu. At home, use the topmost right and left keyboard arrow keys to control the nano fighter, and press f12 to return to the battle mode. Items Before entering the battle mode, you can equip your weapons by selecting the item icon on the top left of the game. In battle, you can switch between different weapons by pressing the space bar. You can lock the weapons on the nano fighter with c9d1549cdd

Optic and vertebral osteomyelitis caused by Corynebacterium bovis is rare. The diagnosis is usually missed, which results in a long delay of appropriate treatment. We present a case of C bovis osteomyelitis of the lower cervical spine and left orbit. Patients with an antecedent chronic otitis should be suspected of having C bovis osteomyelitis if they present with visual symptoms in the absence of a primary source of infection.

Q: How do I get the output of a command run in Windows from a Linux VM on the same host? I am running Linux Mint 17.3 and I am using Windows 10 through VirtualBox and have installed the Guest Additions. I have also enabled the two-headed mode in VirtualBox to allow me to copy/paste between them. When I run the command from within Windows I get the command line back and a prompt for the output but I am unable to get the output to come back to the host OS and it just sits there. I have tried a few different methods and none seem to work. Any suggestions?

A: I am not sure why it worked afterall. Here is how to run a command on the Linux VM and have the output returned to the host OS.

Command: `xargs echo abcd:abcd`

Output: `abcd:abcd`

How I ran it: `xargs echo abcd:abcd`

Inside my xargs utility I set the `-I` flag to the `$0` variable so it read the command and the output from the same shell as the Linux VM.
