This puzzle game is a true remake of the classic game Castlevania II: Simon's Quest. You may not know that the original game was a blast from the past. As the players, you are in the shoes of Simon Belmont, the second playable character in the game. Gameplay is still the same: as Simon, you must fight your way through hordes of enemies to reach the final boss. The only difference is the fact that you do not control the character, but the gameplay is still engaging. Your main goal is to collect pieces of the Heart of the Moon. This is a powerful weapon that can destroy everything on the screen. It is found in three colors: blue, yellow, and red. Your moves are always a reflection of the current color, and these moves can be altered using the directional keys. You can also switch to Simon's gameplay and play with the keys on the main screen. Try to survive at least 3 times as many enemies as the previous time. Watch out for the new stealth mechanic: it is crucial to this game. Every time you see a secret entrance that is closed, a heart will pop up and you will see the new location in your map. Collect them all to have the ultimate weapon against your enemies. The story will be revealed gradually. Unfortunately, the game does not have a lot of new graphics, but there are plenty of other things to keep you entertained. The amount of weapons that you can have is quite limited, and you may find yourself disappointed by the ending when you see all the characters in their grand finale. The majority of them will die, and you may be upset by it, but it is part of the game. The story will be a bit disappointing to some of you, but it's still a very good platformer, which makes it a great game for the fans of classic Castlevania. About This Content of Europe The Forgotten Demons of Europe is a 2010 documentary film directed by Sebastian Junger and produced by Kaiser Permanente. The film chronicles the impact a decade of financial hardship and moral panic surrounding AIDS has had on the sex scenes of the European pornography industry, specifically the Dutch industry, which saw a 50% drop in porn production in the years following 2000. The film explores the lives of sex workers, sex artists, and those affected by HIV. The film premiered at the 2010 Sundance Film Festival. Synopsis In 1999, more than 50,000 people died of AIDS worldwide. Realizing the growing public crisis, the European porn industry halted operations and a massive market research study found that over 60% of men and women of the region thought AIDS was a "morally unacceptable" disease. Consequently, Europe's pornography industry fled the coasts and moved inland. The industry attempted to resuscitate itself in 2005 by establishing a relaunch strategy. As part of this strategy, the Dutch government relaunched "TantraVdok" in Amsterdam as an official sex therapy center. Caring for the sexual health of European sex workers became the life work of the male medical director of TantraVdok. He also commissioned a new documentary, an effort to help him change the stigma surrounding AIDS and one part of the strategy to combat AIDS within the sex industry. For the past decade, the Dutch film industry had relied heavily on the pornography industry to produce the majority of films being produced in the country. The industry had no organized representation and was under the impression that its workers were there by their own free will, an opinion shared by many of the sex workers in the film, who were unable to see other potential career paths. Individual states and local governments passed various laws regulating sex work: from Germany banning such work, to Spain requiring sex workers to have a license. Production The film was produced by Kaiser Permanente and took two years to complete. The film received funding from CIPRA, the European Commission and The Netherlands Government. Its development is documented in the film "Inland Empire," released by the same film production company. The documentary, produced by Danish company Ida Film and co-directed by Christian Frei and Peter Haagerup Jensen, follows ten women during the months leading up to and in the immediate aftermath of their roles in the independent film production process. "The film is about everyday life and living in daily contact with actors, their stages
