I can add and remove some attributes, but nothing else. What would be the best way to insert a new entity into the cache? A: Not really sure what you mean by "the entire entity". If you mean that you have to update the entire entity, then I would suggest using a standard cache replace operation. The problem is that get and put operations on a cache only return a reference to the object in the cache (or null if the object is not there). So you would have to store the entire object in the cache and replace the current value with the new value. There is a way to get the existing value and then update it using cache replace (and cache replaceAll) but the operation is slightly more complex than a replace operation on an item in the cache. There are links in the documentation to the operation if you are interested in reading more: If you mean something like the entire object graph, then it sounds like you have to rebuild it. The in-memory caching library that Infinispan provides cannot represent the entire world. That would be a bad thing. The architecture of in-memory caching leads to a lot of problems when trying to represent the world, it's not a scalable solution and you should be careful about claiming that it is.
