Q: Base64String's toBytes() method on Android 4.0 (ICS) segfaults I have a Base64String whose internal bytes I need to display on my Android 3.2 application. What I'm trying to do is something like this: String str = String.format("%s%s", base64String.getBytes().getString(base64String.getBytes().length() - 1, base64String.getBytes().length()).replace("=", ""), lineEnding); Running this code on Android 4.0 (ICS) device is giving me a segfault error, which is quite understandable. However, I'm not sure how to fix it for now. One of my solutions was to encode the string first, and decode it on the server side to get the bytes. Is there any alternative solution? A: The String.format method is used to concatenate two strings. It uses a default value for the final parameter so it can be omitted. The length of the final parameter should be 1. Otherwise it will be difficult to make sure that it doesn't modify the original string. Instead of directly replacing = you could use this: String str = base64String.getBytes().getString(base64String.getBytes().length() - 1, base64String.getBytes().length()).replace("=", "") + "||"; // I am not sure if it works but it's a guess Bernard Chan Bernard Chan (born 20 May 1970) is a former Malaysian professional badminton player.
