Recent studies indicated that (i) chromium induced COX-2 expression and increased the formation of PGE(2) in RAW 264.7 cells and (ii) aspirin suppressed constitutive COX-2 expression and PGE(2) generation. Our preliminary studies also demonstrated that (i) COX-2 is a novel target for anti-inflammatory effects of ZnO, (ii) ZnO acts upstream of COX-2, as silibinin-mediated, but aspirin-not ZnO, inhibited both COX-2 expression and PGE(2) generation. However, our data did not provide any clear evidence that this inhibition is mediated by COX-2. These observations prompted us to hypothesize that ZnO acts through a novel mechanism(s) to inhibit COX-2 expression and PGE(2) generation in macrophages and that such an inhibition is relevant to the anti-inflammatory response induced by ZnO. To test this hypothesis, this study is aimed to elucidate the mechanism(s) of inhibition of PGE(2) generation by ZnO. Our preliminary data suggested that the signal transducer and activator of transcription (STAT) activation may be a mechanism by which ZnO inhibits PGE(2) generation. Therefore, we plan to test the hypothesis that this inhibition is mediated by STATs activation and to elucidate the signaling pathways in the process.

Swedish Cop Says E-Cigarettes Are Causing More Crime Sweden's Chief of Police Hans Lippe works in a room with colleagues at the Swedish National Police headquarters in Stockholm, April 1, 2011. REUTERS/Karl Lindstrom STOCKHOLM (Reuters) - The increasing use of electronic cigarettes is making it harder for police to keep track of serious crime, a top Swedish police officer said on Tuesday. Swedish law enforcement estimates that around 200,000 electronic cigarettes have been sold in the country, though the government has estimated the figure at 20,000. But the number of crimes such as robberies and car theft involving electronic cigarettes is at a four-year high, Police Chief Hans Lippe said at an event in Stockholm. "Without a doubt (the statistics show) that there's been an increase in crimes that are committed using these (electronic) cigarettes," Lippe said. In addition to increase in robberies and car theft,

When a user inputs a search keyword of a wireless terminal device, a search engine in a search center searches for and displays a keyword result, a web page which stores the keyword result, the name of the keyword result, the time of a search result, and the number of clicks of the keyword result, among information. The user can then obtain the information corresponding to the keyword result or access the result via the web page.

Meanwhile, wireless terminals of a user may be variously configured and thus the user may input a search keyword using various input means. For example, the user inputs a search keyword using one of a voice input method, a keyboard, a keypad, a touch pad, a joystick, a microphone, etc. However, the conventional wireless terminal device has a problem in that it is difficult for the user to use the user interface efficiently because the user has to input a search keyword to search for information. Furthermore, the conventional wireless terminal device also has a problem in that the design of the device becomes complicated because the user has to additionally designate a manner of inputting a search keyword. Description: The subject invention provides new and useful improvements in the field of infrared radiation transmission and detection such as are utilized in medical thermography and in the semiconductor industry. The subject invention is useful in the production of a number of semiconductor devices such as diodes, laser diodes, PIN and SIP junctions, short and long wavelengths optical waveguides, and solar cells.

Description: The production of GaAs, and other group III-V materials such as AlGaAs, AlGaInP and AlGaInAs, are long known and well documented. When light is incident upon an Al_{sub.x}Ga_{sub.1-x}As layer having a quantum well structure, the optical electron energy levels of the quantum well are shifted lower in energy relative to those of the Al_{sub.x}Ga_{sub.1-x}As host matrix. This structure confers upon the layer the ability to transmit, at specific wavelengths, light having a particular energy. Thus, the quantum wells can act as optical waveguides. In the production of optical waveguides, light is absorbed into the structure
