They are of different nature because of the presence of different degrees of hydrophobicity. In the region of large negative dielectric constants the polarizability of the solvent and the polarizability of the solute are comparable. The core of these linkers consists of a water-soluble, protein-reactive matrix with a central hydrophobic region that can bind to an antibody. In RhoA, the CAAX box is present in the amino terminus and is needed to engage the protein in membrane recruitment.
